Snow levels will be 5500-6000 feet. After a brief period of warmer and drier weather late Tuesday and early Wednesday the next Pacific system will push a cold front with moderate rain onshore late on Wednesday. This front and initial band of rain will spread eastward and southward very slowly, reaching the east side and north Bay Area by late Thursday. Areas to the north of I-80 will see several waves of rainfall through Saturday, while areas to the south of I-80 will see little to no rain until Saturday. Snow levels will drop to 5000-6000 feet with this system.
